

UBS Investor Watch

Wind in your sales

Setting course for a successful business sale

Coming off an active market for mergers and acquisitions, the latest UBS Investor Watch looks at business owners who now face headwinds from higher interest rates, inflation and political uncertainty. We spoke with owners considering an exit and those who recently sold their business.

Among current business owners, we found that many fear they missed their best chance to sell. But experts advise that opportunities still exist and the key to attracting the right buyer is to plan ahead. As for business owners who recently sold, most wish they'd taken more time to prepare. They'd agree: start planning now to be ready when the winds shift and opportunity arrives.

Business owners are concerned about valuations in the current market

Many worry about getting a fair price ...

... and regret not selling sooner

How they intend to exit

Expert insight:
Investment bank

"While the macroeconomic environment is weighing on overall M&A activity, there continues to be a bid for high-quality, resilient, cash flowing businesses.

Advanced preparation is key for taking advantage of future market windows."

Oliver Henderson, Managing Director, OneBank Coverage, UBS Investment Bank

Yet many business owners aren't properly prepared to sell when the time is right

They have not taken steps to sell ...

34% Have not identified professionals to help finalize the sale

34% Have not put structures in place to help minimize taxes and shield proceeds

31% Have not completed a business valuation

... or transfer their newfound wealth

40% Have not engaged heirs in dialogue about family wealth

37% Do not have an estate plan

31% Have no plan for what to do with the proceeds

And business owners who sold underestimated the time needed to prepare

Most spent less than two years preparing for the sale ...

% who agree

73% Spent two years or less preparing to sell their business

32% Less than 1 year
41% 1-2 years

... and a vast majority regretted not preparing sooner

81% Wish they had spent more time preparing for a sale

Expert insight:
Planning for a sale

"Before engaging an investment banker or soliciting interest, educate yourself on potential tax strategies. Decide whether any ownership interests should be transferred to family or charity so they can also benefit from the transaction.

As for timing, the earlier the better. We often work with clients years before a transaction to get them, their businesses and families prepared for a sale."

Ann Bjerke, Managing Director,
Head of UBS Advanced Planning

When selling, business owners consider more than just the sale price

Business owners have concerns beyond the sale

% worried when giving up ownership

87%

Buyer won't treat employees well

85%

Won't have as much of a sense of purpose

84%

Don't agree with direction buyer will take the business

Expert insight:
Family and philanthropy

"A successful post-sale road map often requires owners to redefine their purpose as well as roles and responsibilities for themselves and family who will be involved in new philanthropic or entrepreneurial pursuits."

Heather George, Executive Director/
Senior Strategist, UBS Family Advisory
& Philanthropy Services Americas

But they look forward to new opportunities

% greatly look forward to the following

73%

Traveling and spending time with friends and family

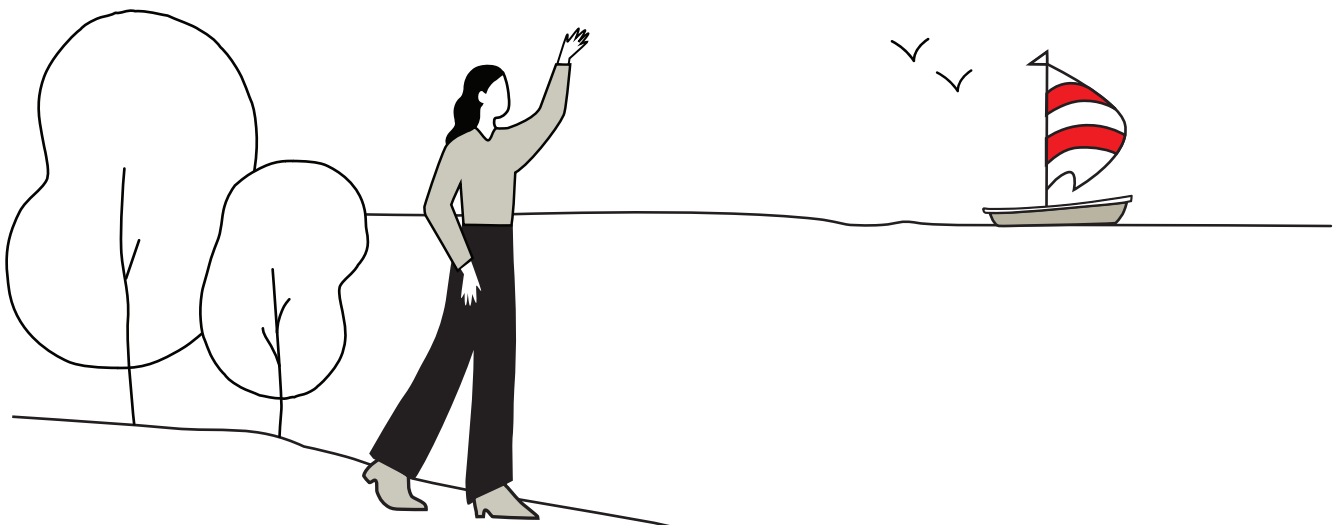

52%

Start a new business venture

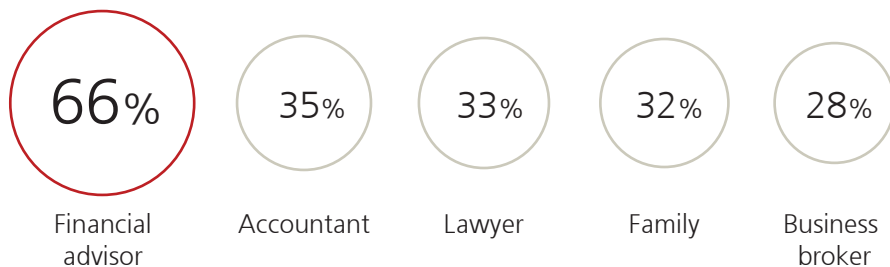

45%

Giving back to community or charitable causes

Most business owners who recently sold sought advice from their financial advisor

Who they turned to

Expert insight: Financial professionals

“For many business owners, their business encompasses how they spend their time, their social lives and purpose.

Talking about these factors with an advisor when constructing a financial plan is integral in getting emotionally and financially ready for life after a business.”

James Jack, Managing Director, Head of UBS Business Owners Client Segment

Plan early and seek the advice needed to take action

It’s never too early to plan, but it can be too late, especially to maximize net proceeds. Strategic planning and tailored solutions, including financial and investment banking expertise, can help throughout the lifecycle of a business.

With the right guidance, business owners can proceed with passion and exit on their terms, embracing their future with new enthusiasm.
